DISPARITY IN THE ACADEMIC RANKING WOMEN PROFESSORS IN LAW SCHOOL

By Carolyn F. Moore

Law schools in Texas do not currently have many women with the rank of full professor with tenure, but they have more today than they had in 1994. Credit for the increase in the number of women professors at law schools in Texas goes, in part, to the work of the State Bar of Texas Committee on Women in the Profession.

The Committee has tried to raise the consciousness of law schools so that more and more women can be hired and promoted as professors. For example, in 1994 and 1998, the Committee sent questionnaires to law schools in Texas asking the schools to list the number of women in the position of full professor, associate professor, and assistant professor at each school. The Committee did not send Texas Wesleyan School of Law a questionnaire in 1994 because the school had just received provisional accreditation; the Committee sent the school a questionnaire in 1998. The law schools returned the following information to the Committee:

School	Women as Full Professor		Women as Associate Professor		Women as Assistant Professor
	'94	'98	'94	'98	'94	'98
St. Mary's	4	8	2	2	1	0
Univ. of Houston	1	6	2	2	1	1
The Univ. of Texas	6	8	0	0	5	2
Baylor	0	3	1	2	2	0
Southern Methodist	0	3	5	6	5	2
Texas Tech	1	3	1	2	3	1
South Texas	7	11	2	0	9	5
Thurgood Marshall	1	3	2	3	2	0
Texas Wesleyan		1		5		0

The Committee reviewed the responses to the questionnaires in 1995 to determine if there was a disparity in the academic ranking of female professors in comparison to male professors in Texas law schools. Once the disparity was confirmed, the Committee members realized they had identified a barrier that prevents women lawyers from full participation in the work, responsibilities, and rewards of the profession. Identifying such barriers and seeking a solution to the barriers was one of the goals of the Committee. Paula Weems Hinton, Terrie Sechrist, and Ellen Grimes have guided the Committee in seeking solutions to eliminate the disparity.

In 1995, Paula Hinton wrote each law school dean requesting that the dean meet with one or more members of the Committee in the dean's office to discuss ways that the Committee might help law schools increase the number of women law faculty with the rank of assistant professor, associate professor, or full professor at law schools. The Committee wanted to help women to move from writing and clinical jobs that typically provide little pay or status into positions of assistant professor, associate professor, or full professor with tenure, which provide good salaries and esteem.

In 1996, Committee members began meeting with representatives of most but not all Texas law schools to discuss ways that the Committee might help encourage more women to apply for faculty positions in law schools. Terrie Sechrist reported that by the end of 1998, Committee members had met with deans of each law school in Texas. Ellen Elkins Grimes coordinated additional interviews in 1999 and 2000. More than one dean commented that law schools in Texas have a difficult time recruiting non-Texans to apply for positions with Texas law schools because the best qualified law professors want to live on the East or West Coast of the United States. Several deans said that at times applicants, both male and female, have turned down positions at Texas law schools because the law schools have not been able to find a suitable position for the prospective faculty's spouse. One dean stated that faculty positions rarely open at his school because his faculty is very stable.

The Women in the Profession Committee will continue to ask for additional information on the number of women faculty and to request meetings with deans of Texas law schools until the number of women professors, associate professors, and assistant professors becomes more in parity with the number of male professors, associate professors, and assistant professors.

DALLAS COUNTY WOMEN LAWYERS ON THE MOVE

By D'Metria Benson

This promises to be an exciting year for politics at the statewide and local levels. The many candidates, variety of contested primary races, and the number of seats in play will in all certainty captivate our attention as we watch the election process unfold. This article focuses on local judicial politics involving women lawyers in Dallas County.

As many of you may know elections in Dallas County in the recent past have been pretty one-sided. Few Democrats have dared to venture into the hostile territory of a predominantly Republican electorate. But, as a result of the last presidential election, the latest census and demographic data, and recent redistricting activity, a new wind is blowing through Dallas County.

For the first time in twenty years, the Dallas County Democratic Party is touting not only a full ticket, but an impressive slate of judicial candidates as well. Women comprise a significant portion of the overall slate and represent one quarter of the candidates seeking judicial benches in Dallas County. Worthy of mention is the race for Dallas County Democratic Party Chair, where Dallas attorney Susan Hays is looking to unseat current Party Chair, Bill Howell.

Women lawyers on the Democratic Ticket in Dallas County are seeking to fill civil, family, and criminal court benches at both District and County Court levels. In pursuit of District Court benches are Sarah Saldana, Lena Levario, and Lisa McKnight. At work on the County Court level are D'Metria Benson, Sally Montgomery (former Republican) and Elizabeth Davis Frizell. While none of these women faced opponents in the primary election, some of their Republican counter-parts were not so lucky. Contested races in the Republican Primary included the 255th District Court, County Court at Law No. 1 and County Criminal Court No. 10. The list of the women candidates involved in Dallas County judicial races is set out below.

COURT	DEMOCRATIC CANDIDATE	REPUBLICAN CANDIDATE(S)
44th District Court (Civil Bench-vacated seat)	Sarah Saldana	David Kelton
204th District Court (Criminal Bench)	Lena Levario	Mark Nancarrow
255th District Court- (Family Bench)	Lisa McKnight	Craig Fowler Lia Rardin
County Court at Law No. 1 (vacant seat)	D'Metria Benson	Russell Rodin Kim Shambley
County Court at Law No. 3	Sally Montgomery	Bob Jenevein
County Criminal Court No. 10	Elizabeth Davis Frizell	Julie Clancy Lisa Fox

RONNIE'S REEL REFLECTIONS

By Family Law Attorney Ronnie Harrison

The following is a review of the motion picture Liar Liar, starring Jim Carey, by Family Law Attorney Ronnie G. Harrison.

As my clients and I sat in a small conference room in a medium-size law office of our big, influential mediator, we discussed all of the unfavorable things we wanted to tell the mediator about the other side's parenting skills, or lack thereof. "We" were the grandparents and "They," of course, were the parents. I agreed wholeheartedly with my clients' criticisms of the parents until the grandmother complained that the mother (her daughter) took the child, the subject of the suit, an 8 year old boy, to see the movie Liar Liar, starring Jim Carey.

I had seen Liar Liar in the privacy of my hotel room at the Marriott River Center in San Antonio while attending the Advanced Family Law Seminar. I especially enjoyed seeing Liar Liar at the situs of the Advanced Family Law Seminar, just as I enjoyed seeing Escape From LA in LA, and seeing Escape From New York in New York. Don't get me wrong, Jim Carey is no Kurt Russell, but as they say: "location, location, location."

Liar Liar focuses on an attorney whose key case is a divorce-child custody-property division trial. No lie! The attorney's son has been disappointed by his fibbing father's fabrications too many times, but not as many times as the mother/ex-wife. Years after the decree, the ex-wife is about to commit the final act of divorce: remarry and move with the son clear across the country. In an act of desperation, the son puts a "curse" on the father so that the father cannot tell a lie for a whole day. And what a day 3/4 the day of the father's big make or break partnership trial! Heavens! How hard he tries to win at trial on truth alone. He can't. But he finds a technicality.

Lawyers should see Liar Liar because it is funny, good-natured, and has a happy ending, thereby delivering much needed fantasy to our lives.

Children should see Liar Liar because it touches on issues that are difficult for them to identify and discuss with others. They can see that a kid has the power to influence the behavior of his or her parents. They can also see that it is not the child's fault if his or her parents don't get along.

Parents and grandparents should see Liar Liar because it points out how their actions affect the children they love. It reminds adults that even though they know they love the children, they must demonstrate their love to the children by their actions.

I recommend Liar Liar. But beware, it touches sensitive areas, so little children should see it with their parents or grandparents. I also recommend that the party taking the child to see Liar Liar be prepared after the movie to sit down with the child and discuss the movie over a snack, such as a soda or vanilla milk shake or chocolate fudge sundae with nuts or a piece of pecan pie a la mode or hot dog with chili and cheese. As you attempt to engage in a serious conversation with the child, while casually munching on one or all of the above, be careful not to bite your tongue-in-cheek.
